Under a White Flag.

General Miles to Geronimo—Ah, sir, good morning. You want to surrender I understand?

Geronimo—That was my intention. Miles—Upon conditions, sir?

Ger—Yes, one. Miles—Name it, please.

Ger—I heard upon reliable authority that Colonel Endicott was going to resign, and I want to succeed him as Secretary of War.

Miles—Are you in accord with the administration, sir?

Ger—(Indignantly)—Do I look like a nigger?

Miles—(Looking over his last year's clothes and his general worn-out and weary appearance)—Well, no, sir; I can't say that you do. You look more like a waiting Democrat in a Washington City cheap boarding house.

Ger—(gratefully)—Thanks. What about the surrender?

Miles—I will report your wishes to the department, sir.

Ger—Very well; and in the meantime don't send any of your men out looking for me unless they are bullet-headed. Some of my followers are apt to act hastily when they see hair.

Ger—(rejoicing)—What about the surrender?

Miles—Good morning sir—Washington Critic.

Injustice.

"Ten cents, sir?"

"W—what for?"

"For that sandwich you have just eaten."

"Why, but excuse me, my dear fellow—indeed, sir, I can't pay you for that. I am surprised that you should request it. It would be a very great wrong for me to pay you for that sandwich!"

"You rascal you, what do you mean? What excuse can you offer for cheating me out of my money in this fashion? Perhaps you can tell me why it would be wrong to pay an honest restaurant-keeper 10 cents for one of his best sandwiches?"

"It would be a gross injustice to my other creditors, sir. My liabilities are already enormous, and my assets are scarcely nothing. I am owing $60,000 to different individuals and corporations. After I pay my old bills I shall be very happy to settle for that sandwich."

"Come now, don't be stuffy; you will get your money all right in eight or ten years. Good day, sir."—Tid-Bits.

Deceived.

There has long lived in Cambridge a highly respected spinster, Miss Torrey, aged 54. She is reputed to be worth about $50,000. About August 1st Miss Torrey went to the White Mountains for a month's vacation, staying at Littleton, N. H., two weeks. At the end of that time a portly, good looking and well dressed man, accompanied by a motherly-looking, white-haired, whom he called his sister, registered at the hotel where Miss Torrey was staying. The alleged sister formed the acquaintance of Miss Torrey, and the latter learned that the brother was Dr. Andrew Jackson Grant, of Australia, a wealthy Englishman. The doctor was introduced and began a vigorous courtship. His story was that he was immensely rich and the doctor and Miss Torrey were engaged within one week. September 1st Miss Torrey left Littleton for Cambridge. Dr. Grant and his sister went with her. It was noticed that Miss Torrey and the doctor called together several times at the bank, where the former had her money on deposit. By various excuses her suitor succeeded in getting her to draw out fully $6,000, it is said, and he managed to get hold of part of it. In one week's time from returning from the mountains, Miss Torrey and Dr. Andrew Jackson Grant were married. After the knot was tied the couple went to Saratoga on the honeymoon, the sister accompanying them. In packing the trunks the doctor insisted upon having his wife pack all her best silk and other dresses, seal-skin sacque and valuable clothing in his trunk. Wednesday the party were at Saratoga. The next day they sped to Albany, and there the honeymoon was eclipsed. Thursday the doctor's sister said she was going out of the city to see some friends. An hour later a messenger came hurriedly to the hotel and told Dr. Grant that his sister had suddenly been taken dangerously ill. The doctor hastily packed up his trunks, which also contained all his wife's best wearing apparel, and went off, promising to meet her later in Boston as soon as possible. After he had gone, it dawned upon Mrs. Grant that she had been deceived, and that it cost her over $6,000 for two days of wedded life.—Ex.
